DETROIT'S 300TH

Detroit's 300th birthday is next July 24. Look for a story about Detroit in this section every Thursday.

all it fort-itis. The Yak has made it his mission to learn about all the forts that once guarded the Detroit River.

Earlier this month, he explored the remains of Fort Malden, in Amhierstburg.
Ontario. Before that, he wrote about two Detroit forts that no longer exist.—Fort Pontchartrain, built by the French, and the British-built Fort Lemoult (Luhr-NOOLT).

But you didn't think he would stop there, did you? Not when there's one more fort to explore — Historic Fort Wayne.

It was built in the late 1840s and almost all of the fort has survived. If you flew over it in a plane, you could see its starshaped walls, grassy parade grounds and barracks.

Unfortunately, that's about the only way to see it. The Detroit Historical Museum, which owns the fort, was forced to close it in 1991, when state money was cut. So mark July 22 on your calendar. The fort will be open that day as a viewing station for a Tail Ships parade.

"it's the best place to see the parade because it overlooks the narrowest part of the river," said Bode Morin, the fort's project manager.

Bode's No. 1 project these days is to reopen the fort permanently. Plans are in the works to do that "at some point in the future," he said.

Touring the little-seen fort was thrilling. The Yak kept thinking, "I'm only a few miles from Renaissance Centerl How can this be here?"

He felt like a time traveler who magically had stepped back into the 19th Century. Bode led the Yak through a sally port, the long, vaulted passageway in the fort's thick walls. It led into a maze of brick rooms with openings for cannons, though no cannons were ever placed there.

"The fort was designed at a time of growing tensions between the United States and British Canada," said Bode.

Cannons were needed in the event of an attack by water. But U.S.-Canadian relations simmered down. By the time the fort was fully garrisoned, or occupied with troops, its mission had changed — to infantry recruiting and training for the Civil War.

The fort was also active during World Wars! and II and the Korean and Vietnam wars.

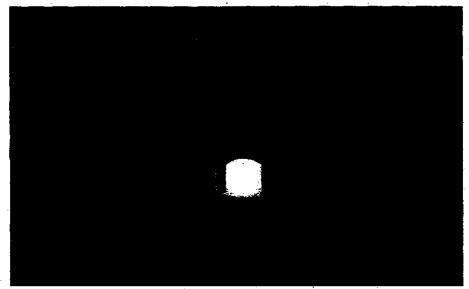

The fort's story is locked away in the old barracke, which once housed 500 soldiers. It the 1980s, it became a military museum. The displays are still there, including a model of Fort Pontchartrain — the only one the Yak had ever seen. He sure hopes someone dusts it off and puts it where we can all see it in time for Detroit's 300th birthday.

A PLAN FOR ACTION

Much of Ft. Wayne, which includes the visiting either at left and storage areas at right, is dilapidated. With the City Council's approval, the 82-acre site in Sundergo renovations.

Ft. Wayne has played various roles in military efforts since the mid-1880s. Planners envision the complex reborn with a military museum and recreation site.

Proposed partnership requires city to be owner of neglected complex in name only

By DAN SHINE FREE PRESS STAFF WRITER

It was built in the mid-1800s to ward off Canadian attack and has served the U.S. military from the Civil Warthrough Vietnam. It also has housed Italian prisoners of war in the 1940s and Detroiters burned out of their homes during the 1967 riot.

For the past 10 years, Ft. Wayne — with its historic buildings and river-front panorama — has been closed to the public except for the occasional flea market. Many of the buildings are crumbling from neglect.

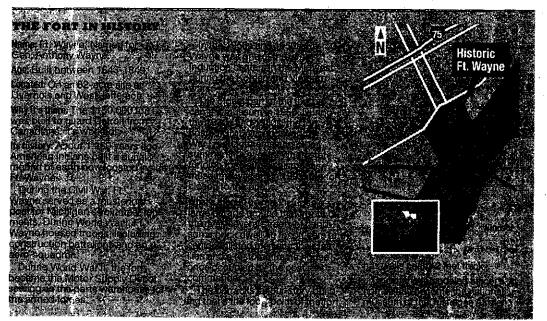

But now, there is a plan to refurbish and reopen the 82-acre fort at West Jefferson and Livernois.

One big hurdle remains: getting the Detroit City Council to agree to a par nership proposed with Wayne Count and the Huron-Clinton Metropolita Authority to raise money to renovat and operate the fort.

The city would retain ownership by representatives from the three entities which would make up the counci would make the decisions about how F Wayne is run. County and metropark officials have agreed to the partnership

It would be called the Historic Fi Wayne Park and Museum Council an would have nonprofit status.

Councilwoman Maryann Mahaffey has reservations: "For me, that's privatization."

She said the plan means the fort would be run "by a small group and citizens' input is limited."

Councilwoman Sheila Cockrel is more optimistic.

"I think the formation of a nonprofit committee ... is a welcome addition to the city's capacity to provide leisure activities," she said.

Dennis Zembala, director of Detroit Historical Museums, briefed the City Council.

"They don't have control now," Zembala said, "Right now it's falling apart." ou're not in control, nature is."

John Hartig, navigator for the Greater Detroit American Heritage River Initiative, said restoring the fort is a priority but he fears it will continue to deteriorate.

Since the federal government, which turned the property over to the city, requires Ft. Wayne be used as a historical site, Zembala said little else could be done.

Those pushing the proposal envision a military museum based on Detroit's building of tanks, planes, bullets and bombs during World War II and a parklike setting with programs for youth groups such as camp outs. Some buildings could be rented out.

"Ft. Wayne has the potential to be a vibrant military museum," said Zembala, "It could be John Hartig, navigator for the based on the 'Arsenal of Democrater Detroit American Heri-racy.'"

The city, county and metroparks authority would each appoint two people to the council that would oversee the fort. Those six people would elect other directors to raise money and decide the future of Ft. Wayne. Zembala said people are needed on the fort council who know how to get federal and state grants and private donations. The $4.5 million from a 1996 Wayne County millage won't be enough, Zembala said.

"It's going to take a lot of money" to renovate Pt. Wayne, Zembala said. "Probably $25-40 million over 10-15 years."

Renewal sought at Civil War-era fort

BY DAN SHINE
FREE PRESS STAFF WRITER

More than 18,000 people watched the tall ships cruise the Detroit River this summer from the grounds of Historic Ft. Wayne, the first time that many people had been on the 83-acre property since it was all but closed to the public 10 years ago.

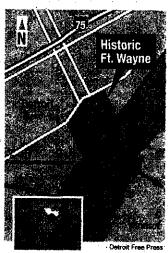

But now there are discussions about reopening the fort — with its historic buildings and riverfront panorama — with a mix of recreational, historical and business uses.

In the past year, the Detroit Historical Museums, Wayne County and the Huron-Clinton Metropark Authority have come up with a plan to upgrade the fort's grounds. It includes renovating some buildings to lease to businesses and nonprofit groups, adding a 125-slip marina for visiting boaters, a riverfront walk and a music stage.

The plan also calls for building a new Tuskegee Airmen museum and renovating a warehouse into a military museum based on Detroit's key role in arming the United States during World War II with tanks, planes, bullets and bombs.

Before any plans can be implemented, however, the Detroit City Council must approve a fund-raising partnership proposed with the county and the metropark authority. The city would retain ownership, but representatives from the three entities would form a council and make the decisions about how Historic Ft. Wayne is run.

Officials from the county and metroparks have agreed to the partnership. The Detroit council was briefed on the restructuring plan earlier this year but has not approved it. It is unclear when the issue will come up again in Detroit.

"We're in a holding pattern while we wait for City Council approval," said Bode Morin, who works at the fort for the historical museums.

Morin gave a presentation on the plan Tuesday at a meeting of the Greater Detroit American Heritage River Initiative's steering committee. One of the federal initiative's priorities is re-Please see FORT, Page 10A SATURDAY

furbishing the fort's grounds so it can be reopened to the public, said John Hartig, who has the title river navigator under the initiative.

The plan calls for some buildings to be demolished but for others, such as the old barracks and the 110-seat Post Theater, to be renovated. Campsites also would be added. There is also discussion of developing part of the shoreline for canoe landings.

Morin said his group received a Michigan Coastal Zone Management grant to study the shoreline and possibly add a walkway and wetlands.

Returning the fort to its former state could cost up to $40 million. The county has $4.5 million for the fort from a 1996 millage. Leasing some buildings would raise more money. Still, federal and state grants and private donations would also be needed

The fort, at West Jefferson and Livernois, was built in the mid-1800s to ward off Canadian attack. It served the U.S. military from the Civil War through Vietnam. It also housed Italian prisoners of war in the 1940s and Detroiters burned out of their homes during the 1967 riot.

Fixing Historic Ft. Wayne a battle

3 years after bond passed, work not started

BY EMILIA ASKARI FREE PRESS STAFF WRITER

It has been three years since Wayne County voters dug into their pockets and passed a parks bond that included $4 million for restoring Historic Ft. Wayne, the sprawling Civil War-era relic at Jefferson and Livernois.

So far, not a penny of that money has been spent on repairing the crumbling fort that is owned by the City of Detroit and was closed to the public in 1991.

City, county and metropark officials are squabbling about who should run the fort once it is revamped. While the discussions have lingered, city officials have missed numerous opportunities to apply for state and federal grants to shore up barracks with failing roofs and leaky windows.

They did, however, win a $500,000 state grant earlier this year to study the structural integrity of the star-shaped dirt barricade in the fort's center. That work has yet to begin.

City officials insisted this month that progress toward repairing the fort's sagging buildings and opening it again to the public are just around the corner.

As Detroit's tricentennial approaches in 2001, they say a master plan for the fort's renewal should be completed by a consultant soon. The plan likely will outline which buildings are beyond repair and should be demolished; which should be repaired first, and what kind of events are likely to entice visitors.

Officials estimate that the effort is likely to cost at least $20 million and take several years. Nevertheless, city officials say they look forward to hosting a special event or two in the 83-acre fort during the year-long celebration of Detroit's founding.

"Now is the time to invest in this part of the city," said Vicky

Please see FORT, Page 4B

Trees obscure the view of barracks inside the Historic Star Fort at Ft. Wayne. The trees' roots are starting to buckle the wall.

This crumbling two-family residence at Ft. Wayne is indicative of the property's deterioration. Despite passage of a $4-million bond three years ago for renovation, no repair work has been done.

Kruckeberg, interim director of the Detroit Historical Museums, which oversees the fort and other historic properties owned by the city. Renewal projects in down-town Detroit, the booming economy and increasing interest in the Detroit River all set the stage for increased interest in the fort. "All of a sudden, it's time."

Before its closing almost a decade ago, Historic Ft. Wayne served as a garrison, induction center, museum and park for generations of Detroiters.

For the past year, officials from the city, Wayne County and the Huron-Clinton Metroparks have been in negotiations about who will run the fort and who will contribute how much to its restoration.

County officials wanted to lease the fort from the city and run it as soon as possible. City officials refused to relinquish control. Metropark officials expressed interest in helping to fund recreational opportunities, but were concerned about spending money on capital improvements to a property they did not own or run.

A small portion of the county park bond money approved three years ago has been spent to cut the fort's grass, trim trees and fertilize the turf of the parade ground so Detroit youth soccer league teams could play there last summer. Another modest chunk was used to hire the consultant whose master plan is expected by early next year.

But most of the $4 million in bond money allocated for the park has not been spent. As time has passed, so have deadlines for applying for grants under the Clean Michigan Initiative endorsed by state voters last year. Other cities are lining up to vie for tens of millions of dollars from that fund.

Wayne County parks director Hurley Coleman said officials tried unsuccessfully to pull together a credible application. "We were trying to make that happen over the last couple of weeks and we couldn't," he said recently. "There'll be another round in April. Hopefully, we'll be ready.

Officials also failed to embrace help offered by hundreds of local businesspeople associated with the President's Council on Sustainable Development, a national organization that drew 3,000 people to a May meeting at Cobo Hall. Organizers wanted to make restoration of Ft. Wayne their "legacy project," or gift to the meeting's host city. But they said at the time that they were rebuffed.

"I hope they contact me again," Kruckeberg said recently. "As soon as we have that master plan, we'll be able to tell them how they can help."

At a minimum, Coleman estimates it will take $20-$25 million to open the historic fort to the public once more.

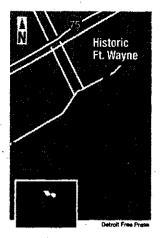

Currently, only a handful of the 40-odd buildings where generations of men were inducted into the armed forces are being used. One houses the offices of the Mosaic Youth Theater. Another functions as the Medicine Bear Academy, a Detroit public school with an American-Indian theme. Another is home to the Tuskegee Airmen Museum, a tribute to black aviators that is open to groups by appointment.

A handful of other fort buildings are used as historic museum offices and as warehouses for thousands of artifacts, from American-Indian beadwork to. pinball machines.

The city spends about $500,000 a year on these uses of the fort, Kruckeberg said.

John Hartig, who was recently appointed by the U.S. Department of Commerce to coordinate revitalization and restoration efforts along the Detroit River, said he has made restoring Historic Pt. Wayne one of the federal government's top six priorities for making the river attractive once again.
"I grew up in Allen Park," he said. "I remember going to Ft. Wayne every year as a kid. It's a spectacular location, right on the river. It would sure be a shame if we couldn't leverage that $4 million and open it up again."

The U.S. government began building Ft. Wayne in Detroit in 1848, even though this plaque seems to indicate otherwise.
