Artillery at Petersburg

Artillery was a constant threat along the lines of Petersburg. The daily shelling shaped the landscape and was central to the siege experience.

Four Companies of Heavy Artillery at siege lines.

For soldiers, surviving the shelling meant vigilance, living in bomb proofs, and dealing with the stress of bombardments.

The artillery pieces before you are examples of types of cannon used by both sides during the siege.

"Simultaneously the rebels opened their mortar battery very strongly. Our mortars and field artillery responded. This continued for ninety minutes during which time fifteen or twenty shells could be constantly counted in midair at one time. A more splendid display I never witnessed!"
